TERMS OF REFERENCE

The systemic review will examine the following:

- Whether missing persons and death investigations involving Indigenous Peoples are conducted in discriminatory ways
- The adequacy and effectiveness of existing policies and identified best practices relating to the above issues
- The adequacy of training and education provided to supervisors and front-line officers relating to the above issues

- The extent to which officers are held accountable for non-compliance

- Whether policies, practices, training, education, oversight and accountability mechanisms, and community outreach should be created, modified or enhanced to prevent discriminatory and ineffective policing, particularly in the context of investigations into the disappearances and deaths of Indigenous Peoples

The systemic review will consult and meet with Indigenous leaders and communities. It will also be informed by the findings and recommendations of the coroner's jury arising out of the deaths of seven Indigenous youths; by the findings of an ongoing OIPRD conduct investigation into the Thunder Bay Police Service's handling of an investigation into the death of Stacey DeBungee; and by the findings of an ongoing OIPRD investigation into allegations of racist comments posted on the Internet by Thunder Bay Police officers. It will be informed by, and if requested, share its systemic work with the ongoing National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls.

OIPRD FACTS

- The OIPRD receives, manages and oversees all public complaints about Ontario's municipal, regional and provincial police.
- The OIPRD is an independent arm's length agency of the Ontario Ministry of the Attorney General.
- The Police Services Act gives the Independent Police Review Director the power to conduct systemic reviews. A systemic review examines the systems – policies, procedures and practices – and the root causes that promote or perpetuate systemic issues within a police service. The purpose of a systemic review is not to assign individual fault, but to determine whether systemic failings have occurred and to identify issues to be addressed in order to make recommendations to enhance public confidence in policing.
